

Carol McMahan

Carol McMahan

(Un)Familiar by Mary Bucci McCoy

Carol McMahon collects quotidian objects—furniture, toys, dolls and their furniture, and other accoutrements of home and childhood—discarded by others. She brings these remnants of domesticity to her studio, where she orders the objects and works surrounded by them, spread out so that she can see all that she has amassed. From this array she selects objects to engage with through intuitive, improvisational creative play that might include cutting the objects up, taking them apart, reorienting them in space, painting, and assembling them.

In these found objects McMahon discovers, rather than a bland mass-produced anonymity, the energetic spirit of the people who made, owned, used, and handled them. When she works with an object she engages not just with its physical but also its intangible qualities, and in turn as she works her own energy is added. When she describes her collected objects as the equivalent of paint for a painter—a palette of raw materials that can be manipulated to create an image or an effect—it is not just the physical, functional or narrative attributes of the objects that form her vocabulary.

McMahon's family moved every few years throughout her childhood, repeatedly recreating themselves in each new home they moved to; in that sense their being a family was a creative act, and the moves a part of it. As McMahon settled into each new home and unpacked her possessions, she would discover that beloved toys had disappeared, her mother having decided which toys should be kept and which toys discarded with the move. As a result of her repeated experiences of the familiar disappearing and lack of control over the things that mattered to her, she learned to not become especially attached to things. And in adulthood, saving things and knowing what she has are important to her.

When McMahon takes apart one of her objects—when, for instance, she removes the “pelt” of a mechanical plush animal—she does so to discover and expose what is hidden, eliminating illusions in both a literal and figurative sense. It is her way of addressing childhood through straightforwardness, working from the viewpoint that it is better for things to be out in the open than hidden.

Multiple tensions in McMahon's work exclude the possibility of sentimentality. Her affinity for objects that are clumsy or awkward rather than graceful or elegant, coupled with her frequent spatial reorientation of familiar objects, gives her work a feeling of dislocation: things are simultaneously familiar and unfamiliar, comfortable and uncomfortable. And when she purposefully negates the functionality of objects by actions such as binding or nailing—whether that negation is visible to the viewer or not—the actions are deliberate, specific and necessary. They become part of the energy of the piece.

McMahon often unifies assembled objects into a whole by painting them white. This amplifies the presence of the unpainted or colored elements of a piece, while simultaneously creating a ghostly, not-quite-present feeling. And as the whiteness partially erases the physical characteristics of the objects, the shadows cast by the work further dissolve the solidity of the work, suggesting a process of purification, dissolution, and letting go.

Mary Bucci McCoy is a Boston-based painter who exhibits nationally. She frequently writes about art for publication.

Home Front

Bromfield Gallery, Boston, MA

2013

LEFT
Home Front, 2013
found wooden doll house,
gesso, acrylic
45" x 24" x 24"

RIGHT
Rescue Remedy, 2013
found wooden footstool, needlepoint, gesso, acrylic 13" dia. x 10"

Brewing Time Varies, 2013 found corner shelf, found wedding cake top, fabric scraps, fluff, gesso, acrylic 18" x 25" x 17"

LEFT
Brewing Time Varies (detail)

LEFT
Installation view

RIGHT
No Hat Trees, 2013
found wooden doll's chair,
hat tree arms, wood, felt,
gesso, acrylic
67" x 8" x 8"
(including pedestal)

Perfectly Portable, 2013
found Hasbro pig, canvas, wood frame, found book, stuffed toy parts, twine, found wood box, gesso, acrylic
51" x 11" x 11"
(including pedestal)

Standard and Microwave, 2013
wood box, found dolls, cotton fluff, found Steiff rabbits, gesso, acrylic
14" x 12" x 3"

Thank You Notes, 2013
wood panels, wood boxes, canvas, fabric, gesso, acrylic 11" x 64" x 6"

LEFT

Adjust to Suit Your Taste, 2013 foam core mounted on wood stretcher, found wooden table, gesso, acrylic, hook, found painted wood piece
8' x 33" x 37"

RIGHT

Symptom Relief, 2013 found wooden cabinet with mirror, found hammer,
pedestal, gesso
32" x 22" x 10"
(including pedestal)

The Age of Un-Reason

Bromfield Gallery, Boston, MA

2011

ABOVE

Installation view

RIGHT

Nothing's Fixed, 2011

found bookshelf, found picture frame, found book covers, paper, string, gesso, acrylic 22" x 22" x 6"

Installation view

Blackie and Green Stamps Book, 2010 found stuffed animal, green stamps,
canvas, gesso, acrylic
10" x 6" x 10"

Installation views

Pardon My Dust, 2011
wood shelf, wood panels and wooden stretcher bars, cardboard, paper, gesso and acrylic 95" x 30" x 18"

BIO

Carol McMahon was born in California and grew up in the Hawaiian Islands. She later came to the Boston area where she attended the School of Fine Arts at Boston University and earned a BFA in painting.

McMahon has shown her work in numerous group exhibitions at venues including the Duxbury Art Complex Museum, Duxbury, MA; the DeCordova Sculpture Park and Museum, Lincoln, MA; the Danforth Art Museum, Framingham, MA; the Museum of Art and Design, New York, NY; the Creative Arts Workshop, New Haven, CT; Levinson Kane Gallery, Boston, MA; and room83spring, Watertown, MA.

In 2010, she joined the Bromfield Gallery, Boston, MA, where she has had two solo shows, both of which received positive attention in the Boston press.

McMahon's work is included in private and public collections including the Gillette Company, Tufts New England Hospital, and the New Britain Museum of American Art.

She currently lives in the Boston area and has a studio at the Lincoln Studios in Waltham, MA.

Pink Flesh, 2013
found wood, acrylic 5.5" x 3"

Bromfield Gallery

450 Harrison Avenue

Boston, MA 02118

617.451.3605

www.bromfieldgallery.com

Images and text © 2015 Carol McMahon

Photography: Stewart Clements

Design: Big Picture Communications, Beverly, MA

Carol McMahon

